Amazing: The University of Central Florida accuses its own faculty of "unconscious bias and white fragility," admits to harboring "racism in [its] classrooms," and then cancels its own Anti-Racism Statement because it promotes racial scapegoating and violates the Stop Woke Act.

ENGLISH DEPARTMENT ABOUT UNDERGRADUATE GRADUATE COURSES EVENTS

Anti-Racism Statement click to read

The following statement was enacted by the Department of English in 2021. As of July 1, 2022, the statement is suspended as it violates Florida law.

In a time when the deaths of Black people at the hands of the police are beamed directly into our cell phones again and again, when Latinx children have been deliberately separated from their parents at the border, when Indigenous sovereignty is being violated, when Black and Latinx people are disproportionately being killed by a pandemic, and when anti-Asian racism is on the rise as the result of that same pandemic, we arrive at a long-delayed moment of reckoning.

In a public statement titled "Working Toward a More Inclusive UCF," dated August 27, 2020, University President Alexander Cartwright addressed this moment of reckoning in unequivocal terms: "There has never been a more important time for us to tackle these issues together, with long-standing inequities and discrimination made more visible by the pandemic and the recent horrific violence further illuminating the systemic racism plaguing our society and impacting so many." The Department of English joins with President Cartwright in condemning "the systemic racism plaguing our society," and to the extent that we recognize such racism in our classrooms, we need to work together to eliminate it. Unconscious bias and white fragility are pervasive throughout society, and we recognize that they also exist among faculty. We have many students of color in our department, but we recognize that we have not systematically made sure they feel welcome. We have work to do.

Such work begins by acknowledging that our discipline of English has been disfigured by an appalling history of complicity in perpetuating colonialist and racist practices and power structures. Our field has for too long upheld a canon of literature that is exclusive, elitist, and blindingly white. Although our academic field has in recent years taken some strides in challenging this history of institutional and structural racism by recognizing the values of diversity, inclusion, and multiculturalism, we also need to acknowledge that such changes have been too slow in coming. And while the three major areas of study in the English Department—Creative Writing, Literature, and Technical Communication—have made piecemeal efforts to diversify both the
