Ideology is a killer

The Covid response failed because the gatekeepers had (and still have) the wrong theory of government, knowledge production, and health. Their theory:

- Centralize everything in the hands of a few bureaucrats.
- Suppress speech, give orders, flood the public square with propaganda, and tell the peasants what to do.
- If this doesn't work, then just do it again, but more fervently this time.

In response to a pandemic, what one should actually do is:

- Decentralize everything so that 1 million doctors and 330 million citizens can use their best judgement to discover what works in practice.
- Encourage debate, listen to others, practice humility.
- Hold all conclusions tentatively, course-correct as often as needed.

If one follows the mainstream approach, one will never exit the era of pandemics.

If one follows the second approach, life would return to normal in 30 days.

Google to introduce behavioral "interventions"

Google has presented its project dubbed "Info Interventions" based on what it says is a behavioral science that, if these "interventions" are used as directed, could "teach" users to the degree they will become resilient to online harms. Another promise is that by "pre-bunking misinformation" users can be "immunized."

An old philosophical toolkit (Aristotle's Logos, Pathos, Ethos, Karios, and Topos) given a little modern embellishment in the age of Propaganda... why didn't we get taught any of this in our formal and fancy education?
